1	3	Motherhood statements, is it talking about council or the community? Dynamic? what do you mean?	2	its the usualy lefty, feel good, light on any substance	2	Who picked the panel? I'll bet it was the usual activists that want us all to cycle everywhere, and live on solar power....who is footing the bill?	Focus on understanding and celebrating First Nations Peoples, including acknowledgement of history and culture.	How many indigenous people are there in whitehorse, as usual you play the bigoted, critical raced theory, identitarian politics, how about celebrating all people
2	3	Overgeneralised platitudes seen in the past with no impact. Wishful thinking with no clear goals & how to get there.	3		3
3	4	I think it encompasses everything.	4	These themes already exist within council so not sure they are anything new really but perhaps with a bit more intentional focus then before.	3	I find it's just the same 'corporate' jargon used in most of the key priority areas - not really any different to what already exists within council guidelines etc. however I do hope that Movement and Public spaces theme becomes a real priority and not just talked about and printed about on paper.	Focus on understanding and celebrating First Nations Peoples, including acknowledgement of history and culture.	While I totally respect this, I don't think it should become an over-riding theme. You've just delivered a draft document that begins with, and emphasises a Diverse and Inclusive Community so I would expect that to already include everyone! When you start making separate key points (1.4) that places a greater focus and emphasis on one particular group of people, it immediately begins to segregate, exclude and cause division. Of course the First Nations Peoples and their history are important but if you truly want to be inclusive you must acknowledge everyone equally, not just based on history but with all who live in Whitehorse now! In your opening letter, you acknowledge the traditional owners of the land and state that 'this' has been your constant consideration throughout the process of creating the vision. I'm not exactly sure what 'this' means but from the outset, it appears that this whole report is going to be constrained by not offending the Indigenous people. If this is the case then I think they would already be offended at what is being built on their land in Whitehorse! So there is the conundrum....creating a report that 'says' all the right things and putting those words into action. That will be your challenge and the proof of whether this report is really going to serve any purpose.

4	4	The draft vision supports my own values and those of my friendship groups	5	They are broad and enable a range of actions to be considered by Council in the implementation stages	5	These areas allow all people to be engaged and to benefit from the actions of council	Create opportunities for every person in the community to be listened to and included in community decision-making processes. Remove barriers to accessing community services and increase community participation. Advocate for people of all abilities to be involved in the community in a meaningful way. Focus on understanding and celebrating First Nations Peoples, including acknowledgement of history and culture.	The accessibility of engagement opportunities, services, infrastructure etc needs to be underpinned by universal design principles that ensure that all actions undertaken by council are for all in the community Working in partnership with community organisations is critical to achieving greater access and participation in the community at a consumer, employer, employee and volunteer level People with disability must be actively engaged in the work of council, to highlight issues and seek to address them including Councils advocacy work The work of Council should be considered in relation to the UN Charter on Indigenous People. It is not enough to focus on understanding and celebrating First Nation Peoples - the crux of the issue is to acknowledge the history and culture of First Nations and to reduce the barriers and discrimination experienced by First Nations people including access to health, education housing justice and employment
5	4	It covers very broadly the diversity and inclusion needs of our society ; however, it needs to do more in 'inclusive' ness and explicitly call out exclusive behaviours. Example, signboards without English for businesses.	4	These are appropriate pillars.	5	It includes the themes and specifically prioritises activities that needs to be planned/scheduled for our First Nation fellow citizens.	Remove barriers to accessing community services and increase community participation.	I have noticed that there are services and businesses within this council's geographic scope that are still only presenting themselves in one ethnic language ... thus excluding the broader community from patronage of the same. Such behaviours are neither celebrating our diversity nor celebrating inclusiveness. These needs to change.

Our council needs to visibly and demonstrably be on the leading age of technology, behaviours and operational activities to counter climate change impact. We still have not achieved 100% reuse of our recycled waste. We have not addressed the household behavioural change that takes years to facilitate effective recycle of various products. Switzerland is a great shadow case on processes regarding collection, compilation and recycling of such products. We need to learn from advanced countries and implement with speed.
